

Fulfill Your Life With Divine Virtues

“If the tree of life is full of colourful flowers, then its sweet fragrance of virtues will definitely spread throughout the world, and the life which is full of thorns will naturally prick and injure everyone.” There is no peace where there are thorns and where there are flowers, there is no bitterness. A virtuous life is liked by others and us too. Virtues are like diamonds and pearls, studded in the building of our life. A virtuous life cannot be measured on scales. Let one side of the scale be filled with all the treasures of the world and on the other side, a virtuous life. The life will definitely be more valuable.

imbibing virtues in their life. If someone lacks virtues then they do not try to adopt them. A person with awareness will try to fill his/her life with divine virtues.

A virtuous person, though poverty-stricken, is much better than a wealthy person who never tries to wear the garland of virtues around their neck. Virtues give self-contentment and one can experience peace and happiness. In contrast, someone with a withered face and discontentment can never enjoy bliss in their life. Since you have got human life, adorn it with divine virtues to such an extent that other worldly decorations look dull in comparison. Few divine virtues are described in detail below:

ROYALTY: described as a human being who is civilised and full of self-respect. Each one's diet, dealings and behaviour should royal. Insulting others, being in the company of low character people, getting angry all the time, not listening to others with patience, talking in excess or without being asked to talk all show that one is unroyal.

A royal person deals peacefully with others; no matter how other people behave, we should not leave our royalty. Ancient kings and their families reflected lot of royalty during their life. In present times, those from good family backgrounds, who are educated, they should be royal in their behaviour and teach others the same. A royal person never asks for anything, they are contented with what they have, they never lose their temper when insulted by others. Their behaviour will reflect greatness, they never use foul language nor listen to it. By knowing that royalty is a kingly tendency, imbibe it easily and naturally in your life.

CONTENTMENT: A contented person is always happy with their attainments in life. This does not imply that we have to close the doors of progress; to keep working and achieving is a virtue, but has to be done with contentment. First of all we have to be content with ourselves. It is only then we can give contentment to others. To be pleased with others is very important. If every person aims at remaining content and giving contentment, then that family will be a happy one.

Remember, your contentment should not depend in material comforts; that kind of contentment is not long-lasting. Such a person cannot be content throughout their life. We should remember that the person, who is happy with the self, will always remain content. Thirst for material comforts will increase the desires and confuse a person in the jungle of discontentment. Some people, inspite of having everything, never are satisfied or full. The reason for this is that they are competing with others. Stop looking at others, in order to gain happiness in your life. Where there is contentment there is prosperity, and where there is discontentment, there is poverty. Ask yourself, what do you want? Happiness in life or material comforts. If on acquiring material things you still do not feel content, then they cannot give you true happiness.
